About the Child Protection Register

Protecting Grampian's Children - It's Everyone's Business

What is the Child Protection Register?

Every area in Scotland has a child protection register. It is a private list of children who workers are worried about. Our register, which is kept on a computer, covers all these children in the areas of Aberdeen, Aberdeenshire and Moray.

What is the purpose of the Child Protection Register?

If your name is on the child protection register then the workers who know this will understand that you need extra help to make sure that you are safe and properly looked after. If your name is on the register then a plan will be made to make sure that you are kept safe. This plan is made at a meeting called a Case Conference. Workers will explain this plan to you and if you are old enough to understand, you can read it. You can also say what help you would like and ask any questions - but remember that everyone has to be sure that your safety always must come first.

Who can get information from the child protection register?

Information from the register is only given to those people who need to know because they are working to help you. This includes your social worker, your doctor, school nurse, police or teacher.

Remember

Remember

Your safety is everybody's main concern

- This list is private
- It is there to make sure workers understand when children need extra help to make sure they are kept safe.
- The plan will tell you what people are doing for you and who to get help from.
- You can ask questions and say what help you would like
